THE RICHES OF RICHFIELD

Submitted by Village of Richfield Springs Historian Harriett Geywits

Lemuel Ely Quigg (1863-1919) is not a familiar name locally. Born in Chestertown, Maryland, he moved to New York City in 1880 and was on the editorial staff of the NEW YORK TRIBUNE from 1884 to 1894. He served as editor-in-chief of the NEW YORK PRESS in 1895. The start of his political career began in 1884 as a Congressman, leaving in 1900. Quigg then studied law and was admitted to the bar in 1903, practicing in New York City until his death as a result of Bright's disease at age fifty-six.

In 1887, he served as a special correspondent and reported in the flowery language of the day, his views of the happenings at Richfield. His letter was carried in the MERCURY under the headline: 'Liberal Extracts from a Letter in the New York Tribune' as follows:

"If any more people want to come to Richfield, they had better come on. There are so many here now and so many more expected on every train that the hotel proprietors are wondering what to do with all their guests. Nature did generously by Richfield Springs. She placed it in a lovely valley full of trees and meadows and sentiment inspiring rambles. She supplied it above the surface with a rare, glorious atmosphere, freighted with health-giving gases. She gave it two beautiful lakes, Canadarago and Fenimore Cooper's loved Otsego, where Indian valor and romance clusters abundantly. She gave it mountains and hills through which currents of air are constantly drawing, so even when the mountain tips are red in the face with heat, it is cool and breezy in the valley below. And under the surface she placed a mystic chemist, who pounds and compounds in his subterranean mortar and sends shooting up through the ground a dozen healing streams. It is no wonder, therefore, that people who want to feel well and have a good time, come in throngs to Richfield Springs.

A charming thing about it is that every one who comes, brings his family along. Richfield is a great place for families. There seems to be a notion abroad in the land that the guests here are mainly rich, rheumatics and elderly ladies with spiral curls and lorgnettes, but as a matter of fact, though the sulphur baths attract plenty of gouty old men and the rheumatic old ladies, there are whole piazzas full of pretty girls and ardent young fellows who only have the usual two weeks' vacation and who mean to make the most of their time. They ride, fish, drive, row, play tennis, chess and cribbage. They dance and hunt the donkey's tail and promenade and spoon. They go to the races and camp out in the mountains and make tally-ho excursions about the country. In fact, there never was a place that offered more opportunities for harmless fun and frolic than this little village nestling at the base of the North Woods, 1,700 feet above the level of the sea.

When the young people have exhausted all their other sources of entertainment, when they have spurred each of the thirty-six riding horses in Professor Dickel's stables, when they have danced enough to use up all the fiddle strings on Mr. Lombard's violin, then they get up charades and theatricals in the Summer Theater in the park which was sanctified some year ago by the Republican State Convention. The influences of this stage are so eminently beneficial that one of the ladies most prominent on its boards last year has returned to Richfield as a lecturer on Christian Science. The sociability of Richfield has always been marked. There are not those superb distances between visitors which are so scrupulously maintained at Newport and Saratoga. It is not necessary before one person makes another's acquaintance that they should run needles into each other's veins to ascertain the degree of blueness of their blood. On the contrary, ease and refinement are the prevailing qualities of Richfield's summer guests and an agreeable manner is the only passport needed into the pleasantest of society.

A circumstance which operates most happily for the guests is the cordial relations existing between the two leading hotel proprietors. Mr. Proctor of the

FRANK H. HISCOCK

Spring House and Mr. Welch of the New American whom, by the way, is the same Mr. Welch who kept the old St. Nicholas in New York City in days gone by, are cousins and so far from being rivals, their constant aim is to facilitate each other's business. Their entertainments are held in common, they use the same band which is consequently much finer and larger than could be supported separately and, in many ways, they work together for the pleasure of their guests.

As a rule, Richfield is not a resort of politicians. Rather more of them have been here this year than usual. Twelve miles away is the home of ex-Senator Miller and at a distance of only sixty miles is Syracuse, once the seat of the great Indian Log House, where the council fire of the five nations was kept burning night and day from moon to moon, and now is the home of Mr. Miller's successor, Senator Frank Hiscock. Both these statesmen have been here recently. I was talking about Frank Hiscock with one of his warm admirers here a day or two ago, a farmer living in the district who drove over to Richfield to spend Sunday. 'Hiscock', he said, 'will prove a delightful surprise to most New Yorkers. I predict that he will be one of the most industrious men in the State. He can talk amazingly well. He is full of facts, full of logic and full of wit. The only thing he lacks is sentiment. And yet, I once heard him speak when, from the opening word to the peroration, he talked with a soul that fairly teemed with tenderness. I never heard him speak that way before and suppose I never shall again. It was at a county fair. Frank has been making speeches at county fairs ever since he was a sixteen-year-old boy.'

It is rather unusual to find upon the piazza of one hotel a batch of five United States Admirals. There are five of them stopping at the Spring House and a noble-looking set of men they are."

Frank Harris Hiscock (1856-1946) founded Hiscock & Barclay law firm in Syracuse. He was a graduate of Cornell University in 1874 and studied at Columbia Law School, becoming an attorney in 1878. He went on to serve as a Justice of the New York Supreme Court and Chief Judge of the New York Court of Appeals. His legacy was the Hiscock Legal Aid Society, providing legal assistance to indigent residents of Onondaga County.

This letter is just one example of the society that existed during the summer resort season at the Springs.

Precision Feed Management Team Leader

Are you passionate about supporting small farms and protecting natural resources? Join Cornell Cooperative Extension of Delaware County as the Precision Feed Management Team Leader and make a real impact on farm economic viability and water quality in the New York City Watershed.

In this role, you'll work in our Walton, NY office and lead a team of conservation professionals providing feed management planning, animal nutrition and crop production guidance and education for small dairy and beef farms. You'll collaborate with the Watershed Ag Program to develop and implement sustainable practices, drive strategic direction, and ensure program success.

We're looking for someone with a Master's degree in Animal Science, Crop Science, or Farm Management, and at least two years of experience in Cooperative Extension or equivalent professional agricultural experience. Coursework and experience in dairy and/or beef cattle nutrition, particularly the use of computer nutrition models is highly desired. Strong team leadership, communication, and collaborative skills, along with a passion for sustainable farming and water quality protection, are essential.

We offer a competitive salary, comprehensive benefits, generous paid time off, NYS health insurance and retirement plans.

This is your chance to lead impactful programs that protect clean water for millions and strengthen our farm community.

Are you Ready to Make a Difference? Apply today and be part of our innovative mission to support farmers and safeguard natural resources.

Visit www.ccedelaware.org/employment/ for details and how to apply.
